As far as the visuals go, you'll be able to see that there is an attempt to make a more vibrant and colorful game. And if you haven't been paying attention, the game already looks a lot better than it did when I played it on the Steam Early Access page. The last thing I want to discuss is the length of the game. ROTR will be split up into 3 parts. The first will be a short, prequel-style tutorial that will allow you to see what the game is about and give you an idea on what to expect. The game will also have a tutorial in the first part that will teach you how to play. Then, the first part of the game will be entirely action-packed. The majority of it will be the prequel and you will also go to war with the other factions. Then, the second part of the game will include the remainder of the prequel and it will also show what's coming up in the future. The last part of the game will be a campaign with various missions that will try to show what happens if you actually complete the game. Most of the missions in the game will be 4-player co-op. However, there will be also be single player missions. However, these will be of the skirmish kind, not the real C&C Generals kind. So, you'll be able to play a variety of single player missions in ROTR, including different survival missions that will pit you against the other factions and even the robots. Unfortunately, that's the gist of it. ROTR is being released for PC as of right now, but it is also currently in a closed beta that will last until April 1st. So, if you're interested in getting a taste of the game, you'll want to get in on that beta. How do I convert that string to an NSData object? Edit: I can only access the files on my filesystem, not via the URL of a web site. I guess there's no way to open the file locally. Thanks! A: You could use the stringWithContentsOfFile:encoding:error: method. You could probably do 82157476af
